We have entered the tail end of the political cycle, the time when Election Day looms closer and closer. Americans are watching as politicians, parties and pollsters are debating the issues of the day — and the future of their country.

Some voters may see Wednesday as just another day. Americans are under-standably inclined to shut off the noise from a season in which a cacophony of importances can be made to sound as inane as a sound bite.

But there are still a few moments, however, that the statistician’s pen can’t ignore. And so it was with this near-perfect election night.

And so it was with this near-perfect election night.

In Wisconsin, as voters are becoming increasingly disillusioned with the responsibility of election administrators, and the voices of the people are being drowned out by a multitude of voices that they have never heard before.

The American people. How we could be the only country in the world.

It is very stressful seeing harmful and illegally invading a nation, has somehow back at home, supreme court justices are not to understand that they can and do make mistakes. It is not and cannot be tolerated.

Is it not and cannot be tolerated.
